MS 017 – Peters Paintings and Dioramas Collection

In 1935 Peters was one of several artists at the Stout Institute in Menominee, Wisconsin (now a State University) employed by the Works Progress Administration (WPA). While there, he painted murals and about a dozen portraits. In 1936, again funded by the WPA, Peters painted a mural of Truax Field in Madison, Wisconsin. From 1938-1948 he continued his work for the WPA in Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, where he created numerous murals and dioramas. In 1949 he left Prairie du Chien to become the Curator of History at the Los Angeles County Museum.

While in the west, he created other murals, painting, and dioramas, some of which are now part of the collection of the Postal History Foundation. The Western Postal History Museum (now known as the Postal History Foundation) commissioned him to paint five oil painting, and to create four dioramas on various aspects of postal history in Arizona. His work is carefully researched and represents actual events in the state's history. The paintings hang in the Peggy J. Slusser Memorial Philatelic Library and the dioramas are on semi-permanent loan to the Arizona Historical Society at their Tucson and Yuma locations.

ARRANGEMENT

This collection is arranged into two series – documents, containing information on paper pertaining to the creation and celebrations of the paintings and dioramas; and photographs, containing images on photographic paper (and their negatives) pertaining to the creation, exhibition, and celebrations of the paintings and dioramas

SCOPE & CONTENT NOTE

Series 1: Documents

Documents include biographical information about artist Cal Peters written by a historian from Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, where Peters worked on a large mural sponsored by the Works Progress Administration, and a newspaper clipping describing him and his artwork. Also included is correspondence between Cal and wife Helen Peters and William Alexander, director of the Western Postal History Foundation. These letters explain some of Peters's creative decision-making and his monetary compensation. Historical information about the railroad in Yuma, the Fairbank train robbery, the Wickenburg Massacre, and Katherine Stinson were found with some of the correspondence, and are possibly copies of what was sent to Peters to help him create the dioramas. This information would help a researcher understand more about the decisions Peters made in creating the artwork. Finally, publicity and news clippings about the paintings and dioramas, as well as secondary works created by the foundation from Peters's works show the lasting impact the artwork has had on the foundation and the interaction the community at large has had with the paintings.

Series 2: Photos

Photographs include visual images of the paintings and dioramas themselves, both in with the content isolated and in situ, showing the artwork in the context of an exhibit. Researchers can use the photographs to understand how the painting and dioramas have been exhibited over the years. Also included are photographs of Cal Peters at Western Postal History Foundation events celebrating the artwork.
